Buddhist theory of "existence in the middle" and research on end-of-life care

Abstract

Life and death are one of the central concerns of all religions. Buddhism establishes the theory of reincarnation of life and death based on the law of dependent origination, and proposes theories and methods for liberation from life and death. Based on different traditional Buddhist scriptures, this article explores the Buddhist concepts of life and death; combined with modern hospice care, it focuses on analyzing the concepts and traditional practices in Buddhism.
